

Lee Duguid launches courses for mastering the art of digital photography

24 February 2011, Sydney

Envious by your mate's aptitude for photography and knack of capturing the most astonishing shots?

Many of us are enthralled with the way a dSLR camera and a trained eye can transform plain scenes and people into alluring images. Some of us may have experimented with amateur photography but didn't pursue because of lack of patience, the right equipment or (admit it) skills?

In reality, the skills needed for taking impressive photos can be learnt with a bit of professional help. Whether you already own a dSLR or want to get more out of it, it's worth joining a photography course.

Lee Duguid is a professional photographer who has recently launched private and group photography courses that demonstrate the basics, as well as providing more advanced techniques to produce amazing results.

Photography courses

Course prices start from $245 for group tuition and $445 for private tuition. The courses take place both midweek – three-hour evening sessions (summer only), or on the weekend – a six-hour day course.

The courses take place in Manly, Sydney City, Eastern Suburbs, and the Blue Mountains.

What will you get?

- Course documentation covering the basics;
  - tips and tricks compiled from several years of learning, experimentation and lessons learnt;
  - plus a CD packed full of video tutorials on Photoshop techniques and basic editing;
- all of which is received before the start of the course.

Courses explore popular photographic genres like landscape, travel, urban, night, portrait, as well as covering the basics such as aperture, shutter speed, ISO, equipment, capture process and composition through to new trends such as High Dynamic Range photography (HDR), panoramic stitching, and processing.
